The Strangest Tooth

A man named Gideon Mantell was a dentist in England who lived 200 years ago in a town called Sussex. He took his job as a dentist very seriously, and loved learning new things about teeth. Because he was so interested in teeth, he and his wife made an amazing discovery. Their discovery would change the way everybody would think about our world.

One day in 1822, Gideon and his wife, Mary Ann, were walking on an old country road together near Sussex. Mary Ann saw a rock that looked like a tooth! She knew her husband would be interested, so she pointed it out to him. It really did look like a tooth. However, it was too big to be a tooth for anything that lived in England. It looked like an iguana tooth, but it was as big as an elephant's tooth. Gideon was so interested in this strange rock that looked like a giant tooth. He put it in his bag and took it home.

Later, he showed a professor at the nearby university what he had found. The rock was a fossil. It was a real tooth long ago, but turned into rock after many years. But, the tooth did not belong to any animal known at the time. The university professor went back to where Gideon found the fossil, and he started digging. They found the first dinosaur ever discovered. Since Gideon and Mary Ann first found it, they got to name it. They named the new creature Iguanodon, which means "Iguana tooth."
